Since employees of Meraki, a WiFi-development company acquired by Cisco in 2012, have no permanent desks, Studio O+A needed to provide a variety of flexible (and comfortable) work areas throughout the 110,000 square feet of space. Their solution? Communal work and gathering spaces provided alongside dense neighborhoods of benching systems. Of course, all of this work makes everyone a little peckish so there is an unmanned in-house café for morning coffee fixes and afternoon snack breaks. Bright golden Slider Pulls are installed for an extra jolt of color amongst the meticulously labeled doors and drawers.
